Matt Maiocco of CSN Bay Area reports that 49ers center Eric Heitmann is expected to miss the 2011 season after undergoing neck surgery recently. The procedure, which was performed four weeks ago by Dr. Robert Watkins, repaired a ruptured disc and takes approximately six months to recover from. A seventh-round pick out of Stanford in 2002, Heitmann started 114 of 119 games between his rookie season and 2009 before a training camp “stinger” and broken fibula kept him on the shelf in 2010, with the 49ers placing the four-time captain on injured on November 2. Heitmann, 31, is entering the final year of his contract. With Heitmann out of the picture, the 49ers will likely to re-sign veteran David Baas, who has started 32 games for the club over the past two seasons, including all 16 at center in 2010. Baas turns 30 in September, and will an unrestricted free agent when the 2011 league year opens up. Another option in free agency may be Chris Spencer, a former first-round pic...

Mike Singletary's run as head coach of the San Francisco 49ers was marred by all-too-infrequent triumphs and some of the most ridiculous moments in sports history. Singletary, the new linebackers coach for the Vikings, is still drawing criticism from his time in San Francisco thanks to his use of the "nutcracker" drill in 2009 and 2010 practices. The drill pits two guys lined...
